2. Citations and explanations

The claimed invention relates to a plant, an arrangement, the use of a plant and a method for synchronous phase compensation. The phase compensation is accomplished by means of a rotating electric machine with a special stator winding. The stator winding constitutes a flexible high voltage cable. The cable comprises a conductive core surrounded by two semiconducting layers and an intermediate insulating layer. By the use of a high voltage cable, a rotating electric machine can be connected to a power network without an intermediary transformer.

Documents cited in the International Search Report:

D1 US 4785138 A
 D3 US 5036165 A

D1 discloses an electric cable for use as phase winding for a linear motor. That cable is flexible (column 1, line 67 - column 2, line 19) and it includes a conductive core surrounded by two conducting layers and an intermediate insulating layer (fig. 2). Additionally, the outer conductive layer is provided with a conductive sheathing.

In D2 it is shown that it well known to use a rotating electric machine for phase compensation.

In D3 a cable comprising a conductive core surrounded by two semiconducting layers and an intermediate insulating layer is disclosed. That cable is, for all practical purposes, not suitable for using as a stator winding.

Continuation of: Box V

Independent claims 1, 11, 38 and 39 relate to phase compensation by means of a rotating electric machine in which a high voltage cable is used as a stator winding. The cable disclosed in D1 has the same characteristics as the cable in claims 1, 11, 38 and 39. Since that cable is meant to be used as winding in a linear motor, it could be argued that it might be obvious to use it as winding in an ordinary rotating electric machine. However, that cable is used in linear motors, which means that the voltages are below 10 kV. It is not indicated in D2 that a cable for linear motors could be used for the higher voltages, 36 kV-800 kV, used in the rotating electric machines according to the claimed invention. It can not be considered obvious for a person skilled in the art to use a high voltage cable as a stator winding in a rotating electric machine, then use that machine for phase compensation and then additionally realise that such high voltages could be applied that the machine could be directly connected to a power network without using an intermediary transformer. Consequently, the invention according to claims 1, 11, 38 and 39 is considered to involve an inventive step.

The invention according to claims 1-39 is new, is considered to involve an inventive step and has industrial applicability.
